About Mallorca

Due to its significant geographic location in the middle of the Mediterranean, many armies have attempted to invade Mallorca. In 123 BC, the Romans claimed the island. The most famous invasion was that of King Jaime of Aragon in 1229, which was the start of the creation of Mallorca as we know it today.

The name of the island comes from an old Latin phrase 'insula maior' that means 'larger island', as Mallorca is the largest island in all of Spain. Gradually the phrase was mispronounced and the island became known as Mallorca.

La Seu cathedral in Palma is one of Mallorca's most significant heritage sites. It is a huge cathedral built on the site of a former mosque. The building of the cathedral began in 1230 and continued for 400 years. The cathedral has continued to have additional work undertaken with the renowned architect Antoni Gaudi adding to it more recently.

A narrow, cobblestone street in a historic town. The street is flanked by tall, weathered stone buildings with arched windows and balconies. A street lamp hangs over the path, and a small tree is visible in the distance. The scene is bathed in warm, golden light, suggesting late afternoon or early morning.
